Guarding Waterfront.

Byron R. Newton, Collector of the Port, said yesterday he believed the unadulterated Americanism of the business men of New York in making wartime sacrifices should receive more recognition than has been accorded to it, and that he therefore begged to do his own commendatory bit in encouraging them.

"In the work of safeguarding the waterfront," the Collector said, "men having important interests there are being called upon to do some difficult things. Whatever is wanted they are willing to do or to undertake without protest, argument or complaint. Without exception they have come forward, merely gaking "What do you want us to do" "My hat is off and my hand is out to Americans of that sort."
